Helping advance leaders in the education field

The Kilmore International School aims to form young women and men who have a true understanding of themselves, their strengths, their weaknesses, their values, and their view of the world.

Such an ambitious environment takes commitment and teamwork, and the school's students are guided in their journey by an exemplary example. To this end, Principal Peter Cooper has recently been awarded his Doctor of Education. Dr Cooper has been part of The University of Melbourne's research into middle leadership in Australian and international schools.

This research by the Melbourne Graduate School of Education (MGSE) over two decades, reveals the vital link middle leaders provide between the vision of senior leadership and the practice of classroom teachers. How schools strategically prepare, develop and manage their middle leaders is crucial for improving student outcomes and building positive school culture.

The school continues to embark on initiatives that ensure it remains at the forefront of best practice teaching methods and innovation.

Extending upon their recent Innovation Scholarship offering, and the extensive work underway in the digital learning space, Dr Cooper has announced a professional recruitment campaign for the appointment of a Head of Learning and Innovation.

The incumbent will be responsible for leading a process of continual improvement in the areas of teaching, learning, and innovation at the school, thus ensuring that The Kilmore international School remains at the forefront of education, building upon the school's long standing tradition of academic excellence.

Combined with the knowledge and expertise of the existing senior leadership team, the future is looking bright for the school and its student cohort.

Enrolment applications for The Kilmore International School are invited, with applications accepted for 2022-2023 for students in Year 3 to Year 12.

Further information about school tours and enrolments can be found on the school website at www.kilmore.vic.edu.au or by phoning (03) 5782 2211.
