A sense of belonging at Surf Coast Secondary College

Surf Coast Secondary College (SCSC) opened in 2012 as the only stand-alone government secondary school in Torquay. The school is committed to ensuring that every student is challenged, motivated and engaged in their learning and feels that they belong in their school community.

As a relatively new school, SCSC has always had a focus on ensuring that it is catering to the modern needs of its students and facilitating a curriculum that develops students as capable and active citizens of both the local and global community. Most commonly mentioned by school visitors on a tour or visit is the welcoming and vibrant atmosphere that flows freely in every corner of the school.

This atmosphere does not just happen – it is an aspect of the school that every staff member works hard to ensure is present in everything they do, and stems from the college values of strive, unite, respect and flourish.

Long gone are the days when using blackboards and sitting in rows constituted the majority of the school day. A key focus of principal Erin Wright and her team is the promotion and facilitation of independent and active learning.

The teaching staff at SCSC believes in the premise that the more actively a student participates, the more they will engage in their learning, which more than often translates into improved outcomes and greater depth of learning.

SCSC aims to provide a supportive and caring environment that takes into account the different needs of each student. Teachers and staff are focused on providing students with meaningful learning experiences that are catered to each student's current level of learning, with a focus on students growing as learners and always continually furthering their knowledge and skills.

A dynamic curriculum, combined with state-of-the-art facilities and outstanding teachers, provides all students with a well-rounded education as well as the skills to set them up for life in the 21st century.

Despite its relative youth, Surf Coast Secondary College is proud of its traditional values: to Strive, Unite, Respect and Flourish. (Supplied)
